A Modern Twist On A Very Old Roof.

The Cotswolds is a rural area in south-central England filled with rolling farmland, country lanes, and quaint villages. This area is known for its creamy golden limestone, which dates to the Romans and is used extensively on walls, facades, and roofs. This limestone or Cotswold stone is rich in color, and its character is found with a chamfered split edge or saw cut thicker hard edge. Stones can be up to 24" in length and 2" in thickness.

Conservation

Conservation stones are cast from original Cotswold stones giving them the most authentic look. Multi-size, multi-width, hand-split surface, and authentic colors replicate what you find around most of the Cotswolds. This stone is offered for graduated installation using up to five lengths. It's hand-split texture and warm golden creamy color perfectly fit an English country house or cottage.

Old Quarried

Cast with square edges, a split stone face, and a generous 1¾" thickness, Old Quarried truly is a slab stone. Commonly found in the northern parts of the Cotswolds, it gives an entirely different look to Conservation. Old Quarried fits well with a wide range of design styles, with clean horizontal lines and a smoother surface.
Available in weathered buffs and now custom darker colors on application.

Testing & Manufacturing

Produced for export in Great Britain all materials are tested to the highest European and North American standards.

Heritage & History

Visually identical to the historic quarried stone, Heritage Conservation is a multi-size, multi-width cast stone that solves the issues common to historic cotswold stone. From its weathered colors to its rough split texture Consevation is cast from original stones to make the roofs indistinguishable from each other.

For over 20 years, we have been using the heritage Cotswold stone materials around the USA. With projects across North America, our roofs have experienced repeated hurricane-force winds, heavy snowfalls, and intense summer thunderstorms, all without issue.

For peace of mind, our heritage stone roofs are 100% reusable and recyclable. Making them long lasting Green investments.

A natural Cotswold stone roof, when it arrives, requires weeks of sorting, grading, and planning before the installation can begin. In comparison a heritage stone roof comes with an installation guide that has stone on the roof without any sorting or grading.

All stone materials are shipped in crates presorted by size. The installer will be provided with a section guide showing the graduations course by course. This takes the guesswork out of the installation and allows the roofer to plan his work, leaving each section ready to start when the stone arrives.

DESIGN STYLE

Natural stone is one of the most underutilized materials used in modernist construction. Old Quarried has a huge potential for this design style with its smooth face and sharp split edges. Stone is a natural choice when searching for an efficient, durable, and natural material. Conservation and Old Quarried stones can cover both the façade and the roof, creating a uniformity that extends from the top to the bottom of the home's exterior. Should the designs of Sir. William Morris be more of your style; this roof will crown the project as it did with his houses.

Our materials naturally integrate with large windows, wood, exposed metals, and the surrounding environment. Modern, Contemporary, Nordic, or urban, Conservation and Old Quarried stones work with almost any design style.
